Using the Motorola Atrix to Do Art

Very rarely does technology retain a firm grasp on the necessities while still pushing the boundaries of what is possible. Many critics have been skeptical of the Motorola Atrix and its famed laptop dock that seemed to be more gimmicky than useful. However, once people get their hands on the Atrix they soon figure out that this device is a lot stronger and more powerful than meets the eye. This phone has many great features that can help any artist improve their own abilities.

No single part of the Atrix is underdeveloped or unimpressive, and this definitely counts towards the rear-facing camera. Even though this 5-megapixel camera may not be the strongest camera it is still provides the user with some of the best quality pictures and video in its class. The moment the Motorola Atrix case is popped open, the rear-facing camera can capture crystal-clear photos in all light levels. It has one of the better LED flashes on the market, a face-finder feature, and a digital focus that can capture impressive pictures at any distance. Even though there are only so many things that you can do with the camera itself, users can access the App Market and find applications for picture editing.

When you are going to perform photo editing on a phone there are two types of applications you can take a look at. One type is photo editing for fun projects while the other types of applications are for more serious art projects and work. The basics of most programs, such as PicSay or PicSay Pro, are going to include a balanced mixture of filters, focuses, and uploading options for social media sites. There are more advanced applications like PicsIn Photo Studio which offer the user a wide variety filters and editing equipment as well as a cloud storage feature. It doesn't matter how good the camera is, how seamless the Motorola Atrix screen protector feels, or how flawless the apps are, sometimes it takes something a bit more impressive to crank out some amazing art.

Even though this device has all of the bases covered, we cannot talk about the Atrix without talking about the legendary laptop dock. This is one of the primary Motorola Atrix accessories that most fans of are dying to get their hands on. With this simple to use set up, your phone will be transformed into a fully-functional laptop. You will be able to access everything in your phone but you will be able to view it in a larger more vibrant screen. This laptop dock is what makes this device unique compared to other mobile phones.

With Google, Apple, HTC, and every other phone manufacturer churning out amazing smart phones almost by the month, Motorola had to step up their technology if they wanted to compete. They did just that with this smart phone and this phone is the complete package for artists of all styles.
